Editors note: First published in 2005, American Family Therapy Academy Monograph Series. Editors note: Although this chapter was written in 2005, we see little change from Dr. Pakman s assertions about so-called modern psychiatry and the lack of systemic or poststructural approaches within psychiatry.

Systemic therapy also differs from family systems therapy in that it addresses other living systems (i.e. groups of people) in addition to the family, for example businesses. In addition to families and business, the systemic approach is increasingly being implemented in the fields of education, politics, psychiatry, social work, and family medicine.
